In a heinous act of natural murder on Saturday night, July 11, a T-burg spider nabbed a hapless deer fly in its web under the eaves of a porch on Potato Row in Trumansburg, N.Y. The deer fly, bane of horses, deer and tiny tourists, put up a half-hearted struggle then succumbed to venom and a mummy's wrap of silken thread. It was this spider's first kill under the eaves, according to neighbors.
